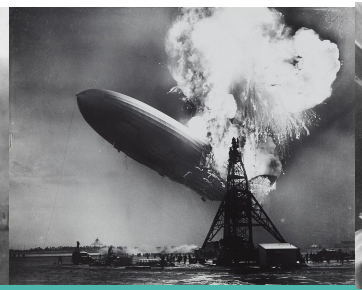
1930s events

From 1929 to 1939, there was a severe worldwide economic crisis known as the Great Depression. High rates of unemployment and poverty, sharp declines in industrial productivity and international trade, and numerous bank and company collapses worldwide were the hallmarks of this era. The terrible Wall Street crash of 1929, which is often regarded as the start of the Depression, marked the start of the economic contagion in the United States, the world's largest economy. The United States, the United Kingdom, and Germany were among the nations with the highest unemployment rates.

The Dust Bowl: The American Great Plains saw enormous dust storms as a result of years of extreme drought and subpar farming methods. The "Okies"—more than 350,000 people—were compelled to relocate to the West Coast.

On May 6, 1937, the German dirigible airship Hindenburg crashes in the skies over Lakehurst, New Jersey, USA, killing 36 persons. The incident prompts an investigation into the explosion, and the catastrophe severely harms the Zeppelin company's reputation and creates widespread mistrust of the usage of hydrogen-inflated airships.

As the first female pilot to perform significant air travel, Amelia Earhart garners significant attention in the 1930s. Searches were unsuccessful when she vanished in 1937 while flying for unclear reasons.



1930s television and movies

With the introduction of talking pictures (often known as "talkies") in 1927 and full-color movies in 1930, Hollywood's Golden Age of filmmaking enters a new period. The 1930s saw the production of over 50 classic films, the most famous of which were Gone With the Wind and The Wizard of Oz.

Donald Duck, Goofy, Pluto, Betty Boop, Popeye, and Looney Tunes were among the animated cartoon short films from the 1930s.

The Universal Monsters, a unique series of horror movies produced by Universal Pictures, are noted for their iconic depictions of mythological and literary monsters. A number of cult favorites, including Dracula, Frankenstein, The Mummy, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, King Kong, The Hunchback of Notre Dame, and other movies involving wax museums, vampires, and zombies, were part of the horror (or monster) genre, which culminated in the 1941 picture The Wolf Man. Stars like Boris Karloff, Lon Chaney Jr., and Bela Lugosi became famous as a result of these movies.

The Three Stooges, Laurel and Hardy, the Marx Brothers, Tarzan, Charlie Chan, and Our Gang were among the recurring shows and serials.

1930s comics

Perhaps the most influential decade in the history of sequential art was the 1930s. It witnessed the emergence of the "adventure strip," the creation of the contemporary comic book format, and the appearance of the most recognizable superheroes in history.

Near the end of the decade, two of the most well-known fictional characters and superheroes in the world made their comic book debuts: Batman in 1939 and Superman in 1938.
